The population in Hong Kong is ageing fast, manpower in Hong Kong will decrease from 2018 and slow down the development and economic growth in Hong Kong. With a suitable population policy, it can help to solve the above problems.

In the area of new sources of manpower, the government should adopt an aggressive attitude towards talent admission. The government should put more effort on searching talented people and attract them to Hong Kong. This increases the competitiveness of Hong Kong with other cities as more talented people in Hong Kong. Since Hong Kong is an international city which focuses on finance and business, the government should target businessman and investors to help the development of economy in Hong Kong. If more and more investors and business are attracted in Hong Kong, they would invest in Hong Kong or make contribution in Hong Kong economic market. As a result, Hong Kong can take a more important position in Asia and the economic development will also be improved too.

The second policy is that the government brings Hong Kong people home. I think the government needs to give them some benefit to attract them back to Hong Kong. For example, providing a lower tax rate, housing subsidies and retirement guarantee etc. As compared to western countries, these welfares are much more and better than them. With one benefit is that Hong Kong is their mother land, people in foreign country will certainly come back to Hong Kong and make contribution to the society.

The last policy in new sources of manpower is that find more labour from other country through labour importation system. In order to protect the benefit of the local labour, I think the government should set up a guideline that the ratio of local labour to foreign labour for the company. This can protect the local labour are being substituted by the foreign labour and lead the foreign labour into the market at the same time. As a result, this can protect the local labour and increase the manpower in labour market at the same time. All in all, new sources of manpower is the major area to solve the problem of population which the government should put more effort to this.
