- I agree with increasing the local manpower in Hong Kong as improving education and training and minimizing skills mismatch would be beneficial to our society as a whole. Furthermore, increasing local manpower will reduce unemployment rates in Hong Kong.
- The policy of attracting talent from overseas and the mainland could be beneficial, but local workers may be jeopardized and unemployment rates may in fact increase. This would mean that our population of immigrants would increase rapidly.
- I definitely agree with increasing fertility rates by removing barriers to childbearing and having the government assist in child-giving responsibilities. In order to control the ageing population, we need to increase fertility rates which are currently falling.
