I feel that the current measures put forward for the pro natal system are poor. If the Hong Kong government is serious about improving the fertility rate in the city, it is necessary to enforce various different policies. Unlike other countries, the only thing that Hong Kong are doing is only promoting. Therefore if they are serious, they have to follow the examples of countries like Germany. Living in Hong Kong and raising a child is very expensive, therefore this is one of the main reasons why families choose to not have children/ less children. Something needs to be done about these costs.
