As there are so many young couples in the society, there are more hurdles that they have to overcome. Such as housing problems, education problem and childcare problem, etc.

There should be external help from the government which can help to address the problem for the young couples. For housing problem, the government should build more public estate and cheap rent to the young couples. This can lower their expenditure. For instance, they can save the rest of the income up to buy the things they want. As a result, this can improve their living standard in material aspect.

For education aspect, the government can expand the 12-year free education to 15-year free education. Therefore, it is free to them to let their children to go to kindergarten. Then the young couples do not need to afford their child's learning fee. As a result, they can overcome this hurdle.

For childcare perspective, the government can offer cheap child care service at government centre in different district. This can help the couples to take care of their children for the couples. This can let the couples to go out to work.

All in all, there are what the government can do to addressing the problem for the couples.
