Population policy is NOT about labor and productivity. I think you are fundamentally wrong in this consultation.

Population policy is about what we want for the society. What kind of composition in our population, e.g., age, education, etc.

Population policy is about how we formulate other public policies to serve the population we want, e.g., public health, housing, etc.

Population policy is about what social culture and value we treasure in a society.

You should be ashamed that your population policy is nothing but a labor policy consultation, or worse still, an economics policy consultation.

Let me list here the Population Policy of a small country, named Qatar:

If a small country like Qatar can have the vision of what its population will look like, a wealthy Hong Kong should at least be as good.

Best,
