I am a full-time working mom, being employed by the government (new contract term) and having a two-year-old boy and 3-month-old girl. If the government is seriously want to increase the birth rate, I hope the government should allow their employee to have "no-pay" leave after the 10 weeks maternity leave. The maternity leave is too short in HK, take the example in Europe countries, they give 1 year maternity leave in average. Even our motherland, China, allows mother to have 6 months maternity leaves. Just two months' time for taking rest, looking after the baby and breastfeeding is considered to be insufficient.
