remember hksar will end in 2047. what this means is that our population policy must take due consideration on the whole nation. we cannot expand too much our immigration while our whole country is still tightening its population growth. ageing of population is just a transitional process to a smaller but wealthier younger population and should not be tackled by immigration for a larger population which will in turn generate a even larger ageing population to be faced with. hk government should fine tune the timing of infrastructure projects so as to maintain steadier and smoother employment and economic environments. immigration is usually introduced during economic heydays as a quick fix but the people introduced will not be able to get rid of during economic downturns. in fact the anticipated peak of population ageing in 2035 is just 12 years before the end of hksar.
